The Gospel in Your Hands

Every employee holds more than a job description. You hold the Gospel in your hands. You carry the presence of Christ into spaces others may never think to invite Him.

You don't need to preach a sermon to preach the Gospel. The way you respond when a project fails. The kindness you show to the colleague who makes your day difficult. The patience you carry in long meetings and tight deadlines. These all declare the reality of Christ more loudly than words ever could.

In 2 Corinthians 4:7, Paul writes, "We have this treasure in jars of clay, to show that this all-surpassing power is from God and not from us." You may feel ordinary. But inside you is something extraordinary... His Spirit. And when you let that treasure shine through your everyday work, others encounter hope, peace, and love in a way they can touch and trust.

God didn't make a mistake placing you where you are. He has a mission in the middle of your meeting schedules, deadlines, and daily duties. Some of your co-workers may never walk into a church. But they walk past your desk every day. What will they see?

Let them see a worker who walks with joy, who forgives quickly, who serves generously. Let them hear prayers rising from your heart even if your mouth is silent. Let them feel the warmth of Heaven in the way you carry yourself.

This doesn't mean being perfect. In fact, you will make mistakes sometimes. You will fall so hard that people will wonder if you are really who you say you are. You will sometimes behave like you are mad..... However, it is not the falling that matters but how many times you pick up the pieces, rise up and move on.

It means being present, Spirit-led, and surrendered. It means keeping your heart soft in a hard environment. It means trusting God to do the heavy lifting while you remain faithful in the little things.

Don't underestimate the power of your presence. When the Spirit of God is in you, your desk becomes a pulpit, your keyboard becomes a canvas, your presence becomes prophecy. You carry Christ. And that changes everything.
