Working with the Heart of Heaven

In the Kingdom of God, your job title doesn't determine your worth, your posture does. You are not just clocking in and out; you are stepping into a divine assignment every single day. Whether you're behind a desk, on a sales floor, or fixing machines in a quiet room, your work is sacred. God doesn't just dwell in churches, He walks factory lines, sits in breakrooms, and joins Zoom meetings.

As an employee, your hands may be directed by others, but your heart is directed by God. You were planted where you are not by accident, but by intention. The way you show up to work, the diligence you bring to every task, the respect you give to authority, it all matters to Heaven. Not because you're trying to earn God's approval, but because you already carry it. You are light in that place. You are salt in that environment.

Jesus, the Son of God, spent most of His earthly life working, not preaching. He shaped wood before He shaped lives. And in every nail He drove, there was honor. He showed us that the sacred isn't only in sermons, it's in service. So serve where you are with excellence. Let your attitude reflect His peace. Let your effort reflect His worth.

You may not get applause. You might not always be seen. But Heaven sees. And Heaven rewards. Be faithful in the little things, arriving on time, doing your best, speaking with grace. Don't just wait for purpose to find you in a bigger role; live it out right where you are. You are not working for man, you are working unto the Lord. And in the quiet corners of your daily routine, God is building something eternal in you.

Your workplace is your pulpit. Your character is the sermon. Do your coworkers see Christ in how you endure stress, how you extend patience, how you respond to unfairness? Even when others grumble, you can give thanks. Even when others take shortcuts, you can stand firm in truth. Your excellence is your evangelism. Your joy is your ministry.

You may never get called into the boardroom, but you've already been summoned by Heaven to represent Him. And every time you choose faithfulness over frustration, you are revealing the treasure God has placed within you.
