Gift of Undivided Devotion

The Apostle Paul didn't call singleness a burden, he called it a gift. In 1 Corinthians 7:34, he wrote, "An unmarried woman or virgin is concerned about the Lord's affairs: Her aim is to be devoted to the Lord in both body and spirit."

What if this season isn't a delay, but a divine invitation? A call to undivided devotion?

I recall my wait time, all I did was bow my head in Service to God Almighty. I became a youth leader, a worshipper in the band, an evangelist and a prayer warrior. I worked as a secretary in the Church and read the bible like it was going out of fashion. Truth is, all I learnt kept me grounded and helped me later years in my marriage when I had to manage complex responsibilities and issues.

Being single is a time when your calendar, energy, and passion can be fully directed toward God's work in and through you. It's not a second-best path, it's a sacred opportunity. Not to busy yourself to distract from loneliness, but to find joy in serving, loving, and growing closer to the One who calls you His own.

There is a richness that comes from pouring yourself into kingdom work without divided focus. You are not wasting time; you are investing in eternity.

Use this season to travel light and love deeply. To go where He sends, give without fear, and serve without needing applause. Not out of desperation, but from delight.

You are not waiting to be chosen. You are already chosen, for a mission, a purpose, a call that sings louder than any wedding bells.
