Humility in High Places

Success can be a gift, but it can also be a test. As your influence grows, so must your humility, or pride will quietly take its place. Proverbs 16:18 says, “Pride goes before destruction, a haughty spirit before a fall.” No matter how high God lifts you, never forget who brought you there. Stay grounded by staying grateful.

Humility isn't weakness, it's strength under control. It's choosing to serve even when you could demand. It's asking for help when you're expected to have all the answers. It's admitting wrong when it would be easier to shift blame. The world may celebrate ego, but heaven rewards humility.

Let your office door remain open, your ears attentive, your heart teachable. Even as a boss, you're still growing, still learning, still being shaped. Listen to feedback, welcome correction, and keep your heart soft before God. Jesus had all authority, yet chose a lowly form, what example could be greater? When you walk in humility, people feel safe to be honest, to grow, and to thrive.

There are some leaders that are supposed to be Christians, who people genuinely dread. Their priority is with other leaders like themselves or people higher than them. All others are merely 'pots for their flowers'. They speak Christ only on Sundays but prefer to be fully secular the rest of the week without a care for the Master's instructions.

You don't have to lower your standards to raise others up, you just must lower your pride.

Let humility be the fragrance you leave behind in every room.
